

DETAILS IN A ROYAL WEDDING

Preliminary Steps Of The Marriage Of Spain's King And English Princess.

ARRANGEMENTS NOW COMPLETED

Day Spent In Social Functions By Both The Princess And Her Future Spouse--Envoys Are Assembling.

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.)

Madrid, May 30.—The ante-nuptial fetes that have whirled along in bewildering splendor for nearly a week past, have aroused the people to a high state of enthusiasm and everyone is agog in anticipation of the royal wedding. Venerable citizens of Madrid declare that tomorrow will add to their stock of recollections the memory of the greatest scenes of popular enthusiasm they have ever known. King Alfonso will be married to Princess Ena shortly after eleven o'clock, and after their marriage the royal couple will pass before the people in open carriages accompanied by the usual accessories of military and official pomp. The hue of marries beneath seas of flags and red and yellow bunting and winds under beautiful arches adorned with ribbons of roses. Every house-top and window along the way has been sold for the pageant. Large numbers of mounted and unmounted troops drawn from every part of the kingdom will pit their strength against the masses of spectators who must struggle for positions in the streets.

The people have entered into the celebration of the happy national event with intense enthusiasm. Their mood increased as Madrid took on fresh accessions of color, and today it appears as though everybody has quit business and lent his voice and presence to the popular revelry. The city is filled early and late with the crash and babble of voices. It is like a great circus, a huge bull-fight and an endless succession of street fairs. Wherever the young king appears one sees repeated acts of the warm homage which distinguish the whole festival.

The law of Spain requires the reading and signing of the nuptial contract and the "tomar de dichos"—a promise of marriage. This ceremony took place at the Pardo palace this afternoon and was a most impressive function. It was witnessed by the whole Spanish royal family, the Prince of Wales, representing King Edward; the English ambassador, the grandees of Spain and the exalted functionaries of the palace.

The lord chancellor presided at a table covered with crimson velvet. The minister of justice, Senor Garcia Prieto, in his quality of notary general of the kingdom, read the nuptial contract, which was then signed, in the first place by Alfonso XIII. and Princess Ena; then by the Queen Mother, the Prince of Wales, the Princesses Maria Teresa and Isabella and Princess Henry of Battenberg, mother of the bride-elect. The witnesses appearing on behalf of the bridegroom were the ministers, the cardinal primate of Spain and Archbishop of Toledo; the head steward of the palace, the commander of the King's Halberdiers, the first aide-de-camp of the king and the chief intendant of the palace. As witnesses for Princess Ena the contract was signed by the head steward of the palace, the Marquis of Vienna, the British ambassador, and several gentlemen of the suite of Princess Henry.

When all the necessary signatures had been appended to the nuptial contract, Cardinal Sanchez, assisted by the head chaplain of the palace, proceeded to the ceremony of the "tomar de dichos." The betrothed couple knelt before the cardinal, each placing the right hand on the volume of holy writ and the left over the heart. Each then solemnly promised to fulfill all the obligations of the nuptial contract.

The program for tomorrow is as follows:

At 10:45 the bride and bridegroom together with the official witnesses and the invited guests will assemble at the Church of St. Gerónimo. At eleven o'clock the marriage ceremony will be performed by Cardinal Sanchez, assisted by numerous archbishops, bishops and minor prelates. At the conclusion of the ceremony the royal couple will drive to the palace in a wonderful ebony and pearl coach. The procession is expected to be the most gorgeous ever witnessed in Spain in modern times. In the afternoon Cardinal Sanchez, in accordance with Spanish custom, will call at the palace to solemnly bless the habitation of the newly married couple, and the nuptial bed. Tomorrow night Madrid will be illuminated as never before in her history. Gala performances will be given in all the theatres and the populace will give itself up to merry-making and feasting.

The priests of the various parishes of Madrid will have a busy time tomorrow. There is a rush of betrothed couples of the poorer classes to be married on the same day as the king. In one parish alone the banns of fifty couples have been published. This is typical of the other parishes throughout the capital and in all probability the royal wedding day will be similarly celebrated in other parts of Spain.

Miss Cornelia Soverhill of New York, who is a guest at the home of Myron Soverhill, delivered an informal talk at the Presbyterian church parlors last evening on "Some Phases of the Work of the Children's Aid Society in New York." The lecture was given under the auspices of the Young People's Christian Endeavor and the audience was a large one.

GLIMPSES OF SULLIVAN.
 Police's Late Fire Chief, Who Had a National Reputation.
 There is no one whose death by the great earthquake will be mourned more sincerely in San Francisco than that of Fire Chief Daniel J. Sullivan, the friend of the city, says the New York Evening Sun.
 Daniel J. Sullivan was one of the great fire chiefs of the United States.
 In a glass case in a large room of the San Francisco city hall, where the chief and his assistants had their offices and where the fire-commissioners met, were trophies which had been sent to Sullivan from chiefs of other cities who knew the man and thus testified their appreciation of his efficiency and of his many qualities, which made every one who knew him
 like him.
 Sullivan was not a very old man, but he had been head of the department for many years, and he built it into what it was—second only to the fire department of New York. When he became its head he found it badly crippled.
 He put it on the most modern basis, saw to it that water towers were secured, no engines obtained, and was the earnest advocate of the plan to have increased the city water supply by installing an immense reservoir on top of Twin peaks, at the farthest end of Market street, which should hold an auxiliary supply of 20,000,000 gallons to be furnished at high pressure to any part of the city when the emergency arose.
 The mains in San Francisco were not large enough anyhow, and in districts where there should have been hydrants there were none at all or else they were so far apart as to be practically useless. Sullivan constantly pointed out the city's need in that respect. He was an engineer of ability, and although the fire commissioners liked to be heard on meeting day, they always deferred to the opinions of the chief, recognizing his knowledge of the subject.
 The chief made a study of the fire departments of other cities in the United States, and when he found that some city had an improvement which San Francisco's fire department did not have and needed he brought all his force to bear upon the commissioners to see that they saw matters in the same light as he did.
 One thing San Francisco lacked, and that was a fire boat. A year ago the chief and the commissioners advocated a bill before the state legislature to provide for one, as only the harbor tugs were available in case of a great fire.
 It was the second time this very much needed matter had been put forward.
 It fell through the first time for some reason or other, and the recent congregation came and found the city without a fire boat. The ground had been selected for the reservoir and the plans were being actively pushed.
 No chief had a firmer place in the affections of his men than Sullivan. He was known as a man who always went into a burning building first, and he would not allow his men to take any risk that he did not take himself. His great kindness of heart was a byword not only in the department, but all over the city, so that his death is really a personal loss to all San Franciscans.
 The president of the board of fire commissioners presided at trials, but Sullivan was a member of the board and was always ready to put in a good word for a man when there was any excuse for him at all.
 The chief had the name of carrying more persons from burning buildings in his arms than any other man in the city. How many rescues he personally made no one will ever know, but years ago he was called before the mayor, who plucked upon his breast a medal
 for one of the greatest deeds of heroism that a fireman can perform. His name was written in a big red book at fire headquarters, which was always kept under glass. It was a precious book and contained the names of about five others besides himself, who were the medal which was the greatest prize San Francisco could give. Now Sullivan lies dead, and the beautiful trumpet of solid silver which another chief gave him, and the many trophies he was so proud of, were doubtless buried beyond recovery in the ruins of the city hall.

SOCIAL EVENTS
MARKING CLOSE
NEWS OF HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS AND THEIR DOINGS.
"PHOENIX" TO APPEAR SOON
 Is an "Annual" This Year—Track Meet Here With Monroe Saturday Afternoon.
 These are not only the final days
 of school, but very busy days—examinations are on and will continue for a number of days, while social functions are occupying all the extra hours. The year's work is being brought to completion and classes, societies and "crowds" are honoring the occasion with numerous festivities of different natures. There was to have been a picnic today, a banquet has been planned for Friday evening, the Alumni banquet for the Friday night after graduation and the Senior party the following week. Besides these there will undoubtedly be little spreads and social gatherings.
Phoenix Being Prepared
 The labor of issuing "The Phoenix," which this year is in the form of a high school "annual," is now at its height. The board of editors and their assistants are working strenuously and expect to have the press work done by June 9, having the volumes ready for delivery before commencement. The composition has been commenced and all "copy" will soon be in the printers' hands. As customary the Junior class is in charge of the publication. The board of editors is composed of 1907 students, elected by the class, and class and chat reporters from the four classes act as assistants.
Personnel of the Board
 Kenneth Jeffries is editor-in-chief and his assistant is Douglas McKee.
 The business "end" of the work is in charge of Doane Wright, while the solicitation of advertisements was done by Walter Airis and Sara Mac-Lean. Besides the numerous half-tons that will illustrate the book—pictures of the school board, the teachers, the members of the Senior class, scenes in the class rooms, etc.
 —there will be drawings and cartoons
 by the students. The art department head is Myron Tracy and his assistants are Mabel Keesey, Lulu Belle O'Brien and Tassie Nott. The athletic records and stories of the year's work on the gridiron, in the gymnasium and on the track and field are being ably cared for, Fred Jensen being boys' athletic editor and Sara MacLean girls' athletic editor. The society editors are: Laurean, Marguerite Fifield; Risk Lyceum, Will Poeschen; Forum, Wallace Mills.
"Chat" and Class Histories
 "Chat," a collection of jokes originating among the pupils or teachers and relations of humorous happenings at school or among the scholars, will be one of the principal features.
 Charles Tippet is the editor of this department and three reporters from each class have been gathering the material during the year. These are as follows: Senior class—Ida Greede, Gladys Hoddles, Edgar Kohler; Junior class—Douglas McKee, Myron Tracy, Tassie Nott; Sophomore class
 —Stewart Richards, Marjory Bates, Hazel Howe; Freshman class—Marion Blodgett, Victor Galbraith, Walter Kendall. The class histories are to be written by: Senior, Jerome Davis and Cora Holt; Junior, Mary Mc-Ginty and Archie Witherall; Sophomore, Wilma Jones and Roger Cun-
 ingham; Freshman, Marion Blodgett.
Risk Lyceum Banquet
 Arrangements for the annual banquet of the Risk Lyceum debating society are completed. The event will occur Friday evening of this week in the domestic art department rooms of the high school building.
 The feast is to be served by Caterer Mrs. Ritter and is to consist of four courses. Previous to the spreading of the banquet board each member of the society is expected to relate an anecdote or tell a funny story. Following the supper the usual post-prandial program will be given. Louis Baker, retiring president, will deliver the welcoming remarks and inaugurate the toasts. The other speakers and "themes" are:
 Response—D. D. Manross.
 The Girls—Jerome Davis.
 Selected—Orville B. Swift.
 The Lyceum Poem—Will Tiernin.
 The Success of the Lyceum—Fred Jensen.
 Remarks—H. C. Buell.
 Prophecy—Floyd Davis.
 Farewell to the Graduating Members—Will Poeschen.
Track Meet Saturday
 At the Fair Grounds, Saturday afternoon at 2:15 o'clock will occur the first track and field meet held in the city in several years. For a number of seasons preceding the abandonment of such gatherings here the dual contests with Evansville were always financial failures. For this reason and because the Athletic Association is unwilling to stand the loss it was necessary for the boys interested to solicit funds to meet the expenses. The out-of-town team is from Monroe and the railroad fare and meals of the ten athletes expected together with the cost of building hurdles and preparing the track will be in the neighborhood of thirty dollars. But a small portion of this amount will very likely be taken in at the gate.

 The sentiments of the California club

THE CLIMATOLOGICAL
REPORT FOR A WEEK
 The weather during the past week averaged rather cool, with moderate rainfall, except in parts of the central portions of the state, where the rainfall was heavy. From Monday until Friday the temperature was moderate and changed but slightly from day to day. The weather was clear to partly cloudy, with occasional showers on Monday, Wednesday and Friday.
 Thunderstorms occurred in the southern part of the state late Tuesday night and Wednesday morning, and again in the same section during Wednesday afternoon. During Thursday night the weather became unsettled and continued so during the remainder of the week. Friday was very warm and sultry during the late afternoon and night until shortly after midnight, when the wind shifted from southwest to northeast and increased to high, causing a very decided fall
 in temperature by Saturday morning.
 Cool, showery weather prevailed during the entire day. The wind was generally high during those days, causing some slight damage to vegetation and interrupting navigation somewhat on the Great Lakes. The weather cleared late Sunday night and was settled again in all parts of the state by Monday morning. Light to heavy frosts occurred at the more exposed places in the northern section of the state on Monday morning.

LOADING DERRICK BUILT AT FOOT OF MAIN STREET.
BY ROBERTS & FISHER CO
 Chicago & Alton Railway Company
 Buying Cement Posts From Local Manufactory.
 The famous sand hills on the Southern part of the city which were supposed to be once inhabited by the braves and squaws and the notorious Indian Chief, "Black Hawk," are disappearing, a large number of factories relying on them for the material which forms the principal ingredient of their products. Some years ago these hills were unused, but now there are five factories consuming the silica sand and a derrick will soon be ready to load cars for shipment to the larger cities. This derrick is being built somewhat on the order of the one at the Knickerbocker Ice Co's Plant, but the loader is on a track, thus allowing it to run from one car to another. The sand will be drawn along a wire in the shovel and sifted before it is placed in the cars. By this addition the Roberts and Fisher Sand Co. will be enabled to load many more cars than they have previously by the aid of men and shovels. Because of the good quality of the sand found in these hills, orders for large numbers of carloads are received regularly.
Rock County Stone Company
 The Rock County Concrete Stone
 Company is putting out the usual amount of blocks each week and by the aid of the New Victor mixing and proportioning machine is enabled to manufacture a greater amount of their product.
Material for Public Buildings
 The Granite Brick Company is making the usual twenty thousand bricks a day and have in their yards about four hundred thousand bricks.
 This supply will be used in the building of several large blocks and residences. The new United Brethren Church at the corner of Prospect and Milton avenues is to be built of this material and will undoubtedly be a very handsome structure, the color of the brick being similar to that of marble. This company also has the building of the new State Normal School at Platteville and is now sending about a carload a week to that city. A new public school is being built of this brick at Eagle, Wis., a small city East of Whitewater. There is at the present time but little in use in the city, but during the coming summer several residences will be built of this handsome material.
Wood Instead of Iron
 The new cement post factory which moved here last year has just received a carload of wooden sticks which are to take the place of the iron brace formerly used in these posts. This concern is the agent for the Victor Mixing Machine and have one in their plant which enables them to do faster work than the plants which are without.
Cement Posts for Railroads
 The Janesville Cement Post Factory have about thirty thousand posts in stock which they expect to ship out and to sell to the farmers in the near future. This concern has nearly finished a large order for posts to Chicago to be used by the Chicago and Alton Railroad. Four carloads of posts were shipped to that city last week and the remainder will probably be sent either this week or next. The total shipment when complete will be about thirty carloads. The farmers about the country who were a little afraid to use this kind of post are now taking a hold. A large consignment has just been sent to the Morgan Farm near Beloit and a big shipment has been made to Lyons,
 Iowa, in the last few days.
Silica Brick
 The Silica Brick and Stone Company has about six or seven thousand stone in their yard, which are being sent daily to nearby cities. A shipment of 2,500 blocks were sent last week to Milwaukee to be used for building material in several large residences in that city. This company will install one of the Victor Mixing Machines in the next couple of weeks.
 This will also aid in putting out a larger amount of work than they have in the past by hand.

DANDELIONS TO BE
ABUNDANT IN 1907
 Recent Rains Have Washed Ripe Seed From Plants Into Lawns—Increase in Crop.
 Owners and keepers of lawns during the past few years have been much annoyed and perplexed by the rapid spreading of dandelions. The crop has seemed to be larger than ever this year and from the present outlook the enormous and "luxuriant" growth of this season is to be outstripped in 1907. The yellow blossoms went to seed largely during last week and by Sunday were practically ripened and ready to "blow." Then came a few drenching showers and before the seeds had been scattered or given a chance to be destroyed by falling in barren places were washed into the ground about the mother plants.
 The conclusion is then drawn that next year will see a monstrous advance of these plants against the grass and clover planted by mankind.

WHEN YOU WANT GROCERIES

the most natural place for you to go or send for them is the grocer's. You would not think of going up and down the street carrying a huge placard with the inscription, "I want groceries." In the like manner if you want help, or a situation, have something to buy or sell, do you think you could get those wants filled more quickly by aimlessly endeavoring to make them known to the few disinterested people who may hear you shout them out, or do you think that an announcement made in the Want Ad columns of the Gazette would bring you what you want? It's safe to say that you would think the latter, because you know that everybody that has a want or is willing to fill one looks to the Gazette to fill it.

...FORTY YEARS AGO...

Janesville Daily Gazette, Wednesday, May 30, 1866.—Churches Burnt in the South.—A writer in the New Orleans Christian Advocate says that, so far as he has ascertained, between one thousand and twelve hundred church houses were burned during the war. These churches, he thinks, have cost the people not less than five millions of dollars. In the loss the Methodists were the greatest sufferers, the Baptists next, then the Presbyterians with the Catholics following.

Women And Lightning.—A studious gentleman of Paris, named Boudin, has lately occupied himself with statistics of persons killed by lightning, and he declares that ladies should no longer be afraid of the electric fluid, as, in comparison with men they only suffer from it in the rate of twenty-eight to one hundred. Mr. Boudin assures us that lightning exhibits a marked predilection for the male sex, and where a man and woman are walking together, the man is invariably the sufferer. It is to be hoped that Prof. Boudin will some day give an explanation of his remarkable phenomenon, and, if, his gallantry will permit, make known how the partiality may be corrected.

We Propose To Punish Him.—Some thief invades our sanctum and steals our exchanges from the table. We propose to publish his name in full if we catch him.

Fond du Lac, Wis.—Major General C. S. Hamilton was shot last night by R. A. Baker, Cashier of the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank, in a personal altercation. The general had two wounds, neither of which, it is thought will prove fatal. He fell at the first fire and was shot a second time.

COMING ATTRACTIONS

Life's mightiest tragedy—the drama of the ages—the most thrilling of stories—all these features assembled in one colossal spectacle—such is the attraction which will be offered at the Myers Grand on Saturday evening, June 2, when the motion pictures of the San Francisco earthquake are placed on exhibition. Not only are these pictures the most fascinating and absorbing motion films the world has ever seen, but they represent the absolute climax and finality of life-photography. Beyond the boundary these films have set, the camera can never go. Each successive triumph of the picture machine has been hailed as the ultimate achievement of photographic art, but the San Francisco films rank all alone. There will, in all probability, never be another San Francisco disaster. There will never be another such series of motion pictures. The limit has been reached—beyond it there is nothing to be even offered or attempted.

These pictures, clear, clean cut, faultless in every detail, show the earthquake from inception to finality.

Babies Wear Charms.
All Neapolitan babies wear tied round their necks a charm against the evil eye called "Cimarruta," which means "a sprig of rice." When complete it consists of nine emblems, all of which have magical power. These emblems are the sprig of rice, serpent, half moon, key, heart, hand and horn, bird, shamrock and silver.

Read Less Fiction.
Fiction has decreased in popularity among users of the public library in the District of Columbia, for while, during the last year, the circulation has increased 27 per cent, the proportion of fiction has decreased 12 per cent.

Thirteen Eliminated.
Application No. 13 to practice law in the state of Missouri will be issued no longer to aspiring law students. Recently a would-be barrister tore it up when it was given to him, and the state board of examiners has since eliminated the number.

PROPOSALS FOR UNIVERSITY BUILDINGS.

Scaled proposals will be received by the Regents of the University of Wisconsin up to two o'clock p. m., May 31, 1906, at the regent's office in the law building at the university for the construction of an Agronomy building and for the construction of an agricultural engineering building, under plans and specifications of Architect Peabody, at whose office, in the law building at the university, plans and specifications may be seen. They may also be seen at the office of the Builders' Exchange in Milwaukee, or at the office of the American Contractor in Chicago, or will be sent to persons desiring to bid upon deposit of $10.00 for each set to assure return.

Bids will be taken according to specifications for mill construction and separate bids according to specifications for the entire construction including reinforced concrete construction. Separate bids will be received for the finishing hardware for these buildings.

Bids must be made upon the form supplied by the architect and check to order of undersigned for two per cent of the amount of the bid must be attached to the bid, as a guaranty that the bidder will execute contract. The right is reserved to reject any or all of the bids.

Bids should be sealed and addressed to the undersigned, marked "proposals, etc."

Dramatic.—We understand that a dramatic company under the direction of Mr. Mills, opens in this city early next week.

Westward The Star of Empire, Etc.—Yesterday morning twenty-two emigrant wagons, supplied with all the paraphernalia incident to this sort of traveling, passed through the city toward the setting sun. They came, we understand, from Ionia, Jefferson county, and were bound for Nevada. Their teams and equipments were in the best of trim.

Festival.—The society connected with All Souls' Church are now making their arrangements to hold a Strawberry Festival at the Myers House on Friday evening next. Those who have attended entertainments of a similar kind gotten up by the ladies of this society do not need to be told that whatever they put their hands to is a success.

Disfranchising Rebels.—An election was held in West Virginia on the 24th for the ratification or rejection of the constitutional amendment disfranchising persons who, since June 1863, have given voluntary aid to the rebellion. Full returns have been received from eleven counties, which indicates a large majority for the amendment. Wheeling and Ohio county give 900 majority against the amendment.

Death of Winfield Scott.—The telegraph brings us the tidings of the death of that venerable and gallant soldier, Gen. Winfield Scott. He expired at 11 o'clock this morning at West Point.

They show the shock and its tremendous consequences—the reeling buildings and the hurrying towers. They show the lightning change which transformed broad streets and splendid avenues into heaps of dusty ruin. They show the maddened, half-dressed thousands rushing headlong into the hazy-burly of the night's storm—and then, film after film, the progress of the fire that burst forth as the earthquake died away, is shown. Then are depicted the dynamiting of houses; the entrance upon the scene of the military; the cool, heroic conduct of the disciplined soldiery; the concentration of the refugees into the camps along the parks and water fronts, and, finally, the great work of relief and rescue.

Little Visits

Bull-Headin'!
When all the world is wakin' up and day is just a peckin' Why then at the time I git yer worms an' to th' creek to streamin' Th' mist of night, an' th' trees, in shadders is a-bangin' An' sleepy birds are tunin' up their orchestrates, an' twangin' Th' fog along th' river bank is rollin' white an' gray, An' mornin' crispness in th' air is nippin' Kind of nifty. You hipper off toward th' west where bull-heads is a-bittin' An' as you cross th' bottom land, where rabbits is a-skillin' You just unroll your hempen line an' git your fish-hooks a-baitin' But first you stop t' thread your hook, because you must be steady; An' then you git your bait can out an' fasten on a whopper. For don't you see when on't you're there, you're ready fer t' drop 'er.

You steal up softly to th' bank, your senses in a flurry. An' doltish swish th' pole about an' cast out in a hurry! You scarce kin breathe, ter now's th' time when big bullheads is bittin'—Heavey! Your lobster's gone clean down, you feel th' slack the tighten, An' in a minute you have got a bite that makes you rustle—The water all is lashed t' foam an' seethin' with th' buster! Ke-clip! Ke-clip! The bullhead squirms an' struggles in th' grasses. While you, barefooted, jump about avoidin' of his passes. Gee! While you're stringin' him th' pole goes on a whirlin' jiggin'—Wait thing that you know you've caught another that is bigger!

An' when you git your breath ag'in an' go back to your bobber, Some sneakin' turtle's at your bait and got away, th' robber! rank of the civilian. The people living in this land today, who remember much about the civil war, are elderly people. A new generation occupies the center of the stage, and another is ready for admission.

The sentiment existing today concerning Memorial day is more largely based on history than ever before, and yet it is a history written in blood and so closely interwoven into the life of the nation that generations yet unborn will reverence it with peculiar and sacred memories.

The little band of survivors will soon pass from the stage of action, and the faithful work they perform today, throughout the cemeteries of the land, will be performed by other hands, unless entirely neglected.

The history of the civil war should be a text book in every school, and the flag and history should go together. The emblem of the nation and the record of the dark days of strife, where sacrifice was counted an honor, are both object lessons which can not be ignored.

All honor to the men who fought and died that the union might be preserved, and to the little remnant which remain to tell the story. May the camp-fires continue to burn until the last old veteran answers the final roll call, and when the fires are no longer kindled, may a grateful nation continue to revere the memory of the forefathers who sacrificed so freely for the life of the nation.

A HAZY RUMOR.

A hazy rumor, born in the brain of some dreamer, and wafted over the state, nobody knows exactly how, is to the effect that a certain S. A. Cook of Neenah, aspires to lead some body somewhere, in a forlorn hope that he may land on his feet at the state capitol.

If Mr. Cook is not demented, it is due to him to say that he should not be held accountable for the rumor. If the party who is responsible for the fairy delusion can be located, he should be sent to the state institution at Chippewa, as soon as commitment papers can be secured.

There are some men who should not be trifled with and Mr. Cook is one of them. He enjoys the reputation of being one of the best men in his community, and for the good of that community he should be permitted to continue in the ranks known as the "faithful private."

Mr. Cook had his last innings in politics two years ago. He was the tail of a convention, and when he went to bat he was vigorous enough to swing into line three hundred and sixty delegates, pledged to Mr. Baensch, and that gentleman died on third base. Mr. Cook fell down at the bat and never reached first. His record as a player in the great game of politics—lost caste. If he was out of practice, then he must be in worse shape today.

Let Mr. Cook rest in the ballfield where good men are needed. There will be no game during the present campaign, where his services will be required and when he casts his vote at the reform primary, for the best man, there will be no occasion for a speech of acceptance.

It is among the bare possibilities that somebody may take this rumor of Mr. Cook's candidacy, seriously, although that hardly seems possible. It is about time that the conservative element of the party recognized the fact that it is temporarily out of commission, and this talk about an independent state ticket this year is the height of lunacy.

La Folletteism and democracy united two years ago; captured caucuses and conventions and carried the state. The same combination may be made again. At any rate there will be tickets enough in the field to interest every voter, and as the campaign progresses there will be no trouble in deciding how to vote.

IT MAKES ALL THE DIFFERENCE.

It makes all the difference whose ox is gored. This old maxim is very applicable to the fight now going on in congress over the right of railroads to carry coal from the anthracite fields, where any of the stockholders are interested in the mines.

The Wall Street Journal, in discussing the question, quotes the following paragraph from the Hepburn bill:

"From and after May first, nineteen hundred and eight, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to transport from any state, territory or district of the United States to any other state, territory or district of the United States, or to any foreign country any article of commodity, other than timber and the manufactured products thereof, manufactured, mined or produced by it or under its authority on which it may own in whole or in part, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect, except such articles or commodities as may be necessary and intended for its own use in the conduct of its business as a common carrier."

The nigger in the wood pile is found in the clause, "other than timber," as is pertinently suggested by the Journal.

"It is the most interesting bit of legislation perpetrated by Washington in very many years. It will stand the test of time."

"The Hepburn bill is intended to be a bill to prevent discrimination between shipper and shipper by the railroads. The principle of discrimination is tacitly and openly condemned."

"Yet it would be difficult to find in all the legal tomes of all the world a clearer discrimination than the one outlined in this extract from the Hepburn bill."

"If it is wrong for the Lackawanna to carry coal from its own mines in Pennsylvania to tidewater at New York, why would it be right for the Great Northern to carry lumber from its own mills in Montana to tidewater at Seattle?"

"The Reading Coal and Iron company owns coal and timber lands. The Reading company owns a railway. Under this ruling the railway may carry the timber or lumber from the timber lands, but may not carry the coal from the mines."

Why this subtle distinction? The answer may be worded any way one pleases. The gist of it is that the bill would never have become law without the support of the western members, and the western members would not vote to cut the railways out of the lumber business.

"These legislators were quite willing, even anxious, to 'divorce' the coal carrying business from the coal producing business; but the lumber business—that is the heritage of the west!"

"Therefore this curious provision stands in the rate bill. The peculiar interrelation of the Michigan, Mississippi, Arkansas and Washington railways and the so called lumber combines of those states is not brought under the eye of the law at all. No one is entitled to ask, for instance, whether the Atchison still owns that Kirby lumber stock or not. Nor is it a matter of public interest that Frederick Weyerhaeuser, Washington's lumber king, is a director of the Great Northern railway."

"Is it not possible, under the wording of the act, that some coal lawyer may set up a claim that coal is a product of timber? If it is not, of what is it a product?"

PRESS COMMENT.

Appearance Against Him. Chicago News: Alfonso may be every inch a king, but one might never guess it from his picture.

Chicago Tribune: Have a good time while you are about it, Alfonso. You'll drop out of sight quickly enough after it is over—N. Longworth.

Innovation Disapproved. Hurley Miner: It is now proposed to make suits of clothes of paper, which can be thrown away when soiled. Another boost for the paper manufacturing trust.

Much Ado About Nothing. Atonch Globe: When "mother" goes away on a visit, the oldest daughter left in charge can show more authority in getting six dishes washed than a general will show in leading an army into battle.

$10,000 Worth Of Fun. Madison Democrat: It is claimed that Madison merchants sold $1,300.30 worth of fishing tackle with which about $7.40 worth of fish were caught. But think of the sport!

Seeing Through Glass More Darkly. Milwaukee Sentinel: Julius Chambers, in the Brooklyn Eagle, says "many people have lost their faith in the supreme court." Even Senator La Follette is not as pessimistic as that.

No Monopoly In The Logic. Oshkosh Northwestern: The Janesville Gazette declares that Davidson is the logical candidate for the republican nomination this year. Evidently that is what State Chairman Connor thinks.

It Will Not Be Gratified. Green Bay Gazette: The Wisconsin public would be glad to hear Senator La Follette's comment on that little argument between Insurance Commissioner Host and Secretary of State Houser.

Bringing A Mayor To Time. Chicago Chronicle: The city council of Terre Haute, Ind., by a vote of five to four, has brought impeachment charges against Mayor Blumman, and it looks as if every city in the country had some way of bringing its mayor to time except Chicago.

Little Hatchet For Cooper. Racine Journal: For last George Washington has a rival. Congressman Cooper declared on the floor of the house that when Hepburn intimated he was a prevaricator, it was the first time in his life he had been charged by any man with telling a falsehood. The Racine congressman should be presented with a hatchet.

The Tightwad In Heaven. Concordia Kansan: Some of the tightwads of this town will feel mighty cheap when they are taken to heaven and from their perch on a high stool, where they will play on a golden harp with silver strings, they can look down and see some other fellow riding around this town in an automobile bought with the money they could not take along with them to their eternal home.

Much-Needed Relief Possible. Milwaukee Free Press: The Pennsylvania railroad is going to try an experiment with phonograph train announcers. It is believed that the plan will save many thousands of dollars in salaries, and incidentally, that people will be able to understand what the phonograph says.

The phonographs will be worked from the train dispatcher's office by means of an electric switch.

Yes, There's The Rub. Milwaukee Sentinel: Those earnest

young students at Madison who are barred from participating in the alumni ball because they have no dress suits may take heart of grace. William Jennings Bryan is said to have achieved his present distinction without ever having possessed one of these graceful garments. But, of course, while that reflection is soothing, it doesn't keep the student who possesses the full social regalia from dancing with the best girl of the fellow who is barred out.

A Certain Swedish Citizen.

Whitewater Register: It is reported that a certain Swedish citizen, known as "Candidate Lenroos," has been browsing around the central part of the country to see if he could find any voters so devoid of good sense and so forgetful of true republican principles as to be willing to support him for governor. From the plum look on his face as he went back across our borders, it is reasonable to infer that his quest was far from satisfactory. He ought to have known better than to come; too many of our good people witnessed his willing and shameless trickery in counting out delegates, who had been fairly chosen to the state convention at Madison two years ago, to ever give him a vote even to save him from a life-term in the penitentiary.

Appomattox and After

(Copyright, 1905, by G. L. Kilmer.)

LEE'S army was surrounded at Appomattox on the morning of April 9, 1865, by his lion hearted commander refused to yield until convinced that the situation was hopeless. Several letters had passed between Lee and Grant during the previous twenty-four hours with reference to surrender. Grant asked the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia to avoid "further effusion of blood." Lee offered to treat for peace. The Confederates were hemmed in as the lines stood, but there had been doubt in the minds of Lee and his officers the night of April 8 as to whether the Army of the Potomac was all on the field. It was decided at a council of war that General John B. Gordon and General Fitz Lee should attempt to hew a path through Sheridan's ranks on the west and lead the march to Lynchburg.

Robert E. Lee in person repaired to the picket line the morning of the 9th, hoping to meet Grant there for a conference under a flag of truce. He found awaiting him a note from Grant stating definitely that he (Grant) would not treat for peace. Grant at the moment was eight miles distant, and Lee, having learned meanwhile that Gordon and Fitz Lee reported strong columns of Federal infantry on their front as well as Sheridan's cavalry, wrote asking for an interview with Grant to discuss terms of surrender.

The generals met about 1 o'clock at the house of Wilmer McLean, in the village of Appomattox, and the details for the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia were arranged. The terms were parole of officers and men, with the privilege of going home. The private property of officers paroled was not to be disturbed, and soldiers who claimed horses were allowed to keep them. "They will need them to do their spring plowing," said Grant. The surrender embraced about 28,000 men, but only about 8,000 delivered up muskets. Fitz Lee withdrew his cavalry before the surrender and reached Lynchburg.

The historic Sunday, April 9, 1865, closed with a friendly meeting between the officers and soldiers who had fought one another so zealously for four years. The Federals shared their rations with the southerners, who at times upon this last march had lived upon raw corn.

On the 10th Lee made a farewell address and started for Richmond. Grant set out for Washington the same day to see the president, who had reached there the day before, having left Richmond on the 6th.

On receiving the news of the surrender of Lee, Jefferson Davis abandoned Danville, the new capital of the Confederacy, and started south, under a light escort with considerable treasure in specie. He was captured at Irwingsville, Ga., May 10 and imprisoned at Fortress Monroe. The very last hope of the Confederates, the army under General Joseph E. Johnston, confronting Sherman in North Carolina, surrendered April 26. Other surrenders followed, the last of importance being that of the transmississippi forces May 20. In all 175,000 Confederates were released on parole.

While the surrender of Lee, virtually the end of the war, was hailed with the wildest rejoicing all over the north, there was no unusual demonstration among the victorious troops. General Longstreet said that Grant refused to allow an artillery salute to signalize the event. Lee's surrender had long been expected as a result of the Petersburg campaign and was a foregone conclusion after the fall of the city. And yet it took many days for the soldiers to realize that all was over. Grant's troops remained in their old camps around Appomattox, maintaining the usual discipline, with outposts guarding against possible forays by partisan bands.

News of the assassination of Lincoln cast a pall over the army. No one would believe it until it was confirmed. It has been stated that in after years, even in old age, adults of that period remembered distinctly the time of day, the spot where they were, their companions and what they were doing when that awful shock came.

Disbandment of government forces began April 29, detached parties, railway and rendezvous guards being mustered out first. The troops around Appomattox marched to the seaports and were transported by water to Washington. Sherman's army marched from Goldsboro, N. C. to the banks of the Potomac by way of Richmond, Fredericksburg and Manassas. A grand review took place on May 23 and 24, the armies parading on Pennsylvania avenue, where they were reviewed by the commanding generals, President Johnson and his cabinet. It was on this occasion that Sherman publicly snubbed the secretary of war by refusing to take his proffered hand when greetings were exchanged by the officials at the close of the review.

Meanwhile the Confederates were walking home all over the south and along the border. Thousands of them didn't tarry for the formality of giving the parole and thousands hid their muskets for future recovery and, when lucky enough to dodge Federal camps en route, took the weapons home. Lee's men were "sby" 20,000 rifles. One incident at Appomattox showed the temper of some "Johnnies" about giving up their guns. Two or three days after the surrender the Federal guard of a farmhouse just outside of Grant's lines saw three Confederates approaching the house, all having their muskets slung across the shoulder by the strap. Two of the party were supporting a third, who could barely walk. The Federals advanced and demanded the surrender of the guns. Two handed them over, but the third, the sick man—he was a boy in his teens—refused and prepared to unsling it for defense. The Federals saw that he was half crazed with sickness and excitement and were lenient. The poor boy in his delirium raged violently and had to be placed on the ground, where he raved on and struggled, trying to draw his gun on the foe. An aged woman tottered forward from the house down the path and recognized the lad as a grandson whose home was in North Carolina. He soon became quiet and died there on the sword after pleading with his last breath, "Tell mother her boy never surrendered." In death his arms were folded across the musket, which lay upon his breast.

The assassination of Lincoln sent the struggling Confederates into hiding for fear of reprisals, although among the Federals there was no disposition to hold the fighting men of the south responsible for that or any other irregular method of warfare. The Confederates were too much rejoiced over peace and the prospect of rejoining their families to indulge in resentment for honorable defeat. They went to work at plowing, as Grant knew they would, inspired by the example of men like Forrest in Tennessee and Major General William Mahone of Virginia, the latter actually bearing a hand in the cornfield himself.

The soldiers of the north, top—and there were a round million of them in arms April 9, 1865—had but one thought, or possibly two—first, to get home somehow quick, and to get there if possible in civilian "frogs." The lightning changes of costume made the instant Uncle Sam's mustering out officers had called a soldier's name the last time would have put some of the latter day stage artists to shame. Men had new suits in their knapsacks, in the hands of waiting lackeys or comrades who had got "through" first, stowed in anterooms, in crates outside, in saloons around the corner. Clothing stores were mobbed by veterans with their hands stuffed with greenbacks. Price had fit were of no account. Then, lo, for the photographer's to get counterfeit presentations to send to distant sweethearts and friends. Cast-off uniforms went to the attic or museum of relics. As a rule, regiments were ordered to their state rendezvous for discharge, and the work was done in vacant halls and old recruit barracks. There were no loving goodbyes, either, to the barracks when a veteran shook the dust from his feet to go home—home! The war department during the months of May, June and July forty years ago was bombarded with applications, backed by every sort of "pull," from regiments asking immediate muster out. The veteran who wasn't eager to hurry home and be there for the "glorious Fourth" had never cared to recall it. To get home, to get to work, to get back to school, was in the air.

Thrifty and long headed veterans had bought farms or shops or stores by mail, hired out or formed partnerships by mail. Thousands of seminary boys had carried text books in their knapsacks and for months had been brushing up for college. The war was over. Now for business. That is why and that is how an army of a million melted in a day and a million piles of hands hurried to every toll took up the implements of peace. Appomattox was great. The sequel was the grandest of all—peace that never has shown the blush of regret over what it stood for.

The aggregate of Federal enlistments was 2,778,304, representing with reenlistments about 2,250,000 individuals. The Confederate total was about 1,000,000. The aggregate of deaths from all causes in the Federal army was 329, 228, and 110,070 soldiers died in battle. The Confederate loss is unknown.

CARNEGIE MEDAL HEROINE.

Girl Saved Boy's Life by Sucking Rattlesnake's Poison From Wound.

Miss Lucy E. Ernst of Philadelphia is officially a heroine. She has been awarded a Carnegie medal for saving the life of her companion, Harry E. Schoenbut, also of Philadelphia, at the risk of her own by sucking the poison from a rattlesnake's bite on his arm, says the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The "hero commission" in session the other day in Pittsburgh formally awarded the medal to the pretty young woman and prepared a formal acknowledgment of her remarkable bravery. When told that she had been honored by the Carnegie commission Miss Ernst said:

"We were walking in a grove near the clubhouse at Porter's lake last summer searching for birch bark. Mr. Schoenbut, who was a short distance in front of me, staggered and fell. A rattlesnake had bitten his right arm. I cut away his sleeve, but the arm was already black, and a large sear had formed. I tried to suck the blood, but it wouldn't flow, so I cut his arm with my penknife and sucked all the poison out. He wiggled so that I swallowed a mouthful myself. I succeeded in getting him to the clubhouse, where I gave him nearly a quart of whisky. He was all right in a few days, but I was ill a week because of the poison I had swallowed. My hip was cut at the time, and the doctors cannot understand why I was not poisoned. I did not see the snake myself, but Mr. Schoenbut said it was a big one. He heard the rattle, but thought it was a locust. I am glad I did it, for the doctors said he certainly would have died."

Mr. Schoenbut is the sixteen-year-old son of Albert Schoenbut of Philadelphia. Miss Ernst is the only daughter of Bernard Ernst, select councilman.

A Soap Mountain In Nebraska.

R. H. Mitchell, a ranchman who lives near Belvidere, Neb., has discovered on his ranch a small mountain of what he calls soap, says the Kansas City Star. Mitchell's "soap hill" is composed of a fine and very white sand which when mixed with powder looks and acts like one of the washing powders so common on the market. Mitchell says the people of his neighborhood have been making good use of his soap mine, carting the stuff away for scrubbing floors, polishing metals and even for washing the hands. An effort will be made to market the "soap" as a ready made washing powder.

MUCH ENTHUSIASM IN PROPOSED MEET

Horsemen From All Over the Country Waiting for News of Proposed Meet.

Prospects that Janesville may hold a three-day racing meet July 2, 3 and 4 hinge on the question of whether sufficient stalls can be ready at the Fair Grounds in time for the event. It has been estimated that it would take two thousand dollars to make the grounds ready and the promoters of the meet do not feel able to meet this extra expense. J. M. Dostwick, who owns the grounds, expects to place them in first-class condition by next season, so that a fair can be held if desired and does not think he could make the temporary repairs necessary at this time for a single meet. Several plans have been suggested whereby the obstacle can be surmounted and the meet may be held.

FRISCO'S FIRE HEROES.

How They Fought For the City They Loved So Well.

In a letter to his sister, Katherine Russell of San Jose, Stephen Russell, a captain in the San Francisco fire department, deals with a particular feature of the recent disaster which has hitherto escaped attention, says the San Jose Mercury. Mr. Russell says: "We will never be able to give any kind of a description approaching accuracy of the terrible scenes during the earthquake and for the three days following. As soon as possible after the quake I ascertained that all my family was unharmed. Then commenced our fight with the fire, which lasted amid harrowing and nerve-racking scenes for fifty-two hours without intermission. It took two firemen to hold the hose while two more sheltered them with a wet blanket. And many, many times we would lie down in the gutter and roll in the water, but it would not be two minutes till we were perfectly dry again. Our coats fell from our backs. Rubber coats lasted no length of time at all. Our caps were burned or baked on our heads. Our feet were blistered by the heat on the rubber boots. Yet every man fought on for fifty-two hours, when ordinarily a two hours' fight will exhaust a man. The doctors and nurses went up and down the line and injected strychnine into us, so we could go on. And one volunteer citizen, who had good judgment, went up and down the line with a sack and dipped it in the gutter, then applied it to the back of our necks. Many times we were trapped by the fire and could not get the horses to our engines, but always the citizens volunteered and pulled them out for us. The horses were exhausted also and could not pull the engines at times. One place in particular, up a steep hill, we put a rope on the engine and about 500 people got hold and dragged horses, engine and all up the hill. We had over half of our hose burned. And many of the men were delirious at times. We had no conception of time, and when I came to make out my report I called my men in to help, and while one would be positive that a certain thing took place at 8 o'clock in the morning another would swear it was at 11 o'clock at night. It was as bright as day at all times. You can imagine how we fought for our loved San Francisco, and to see her go up in smoke nearly broke our hearts."

DISGRACEFUL BRAWL OCCURRED LAST NIGHT

Police Called and Three Men Given a Taste of Marshal Appleby's Discipline.

Marshal Appleby was called upon last night to administer a severe punishment to three men who sought evidently to do personal injury to J. S. Berger, who proposes coming to Janesville with his carnival the last week in June. It appears to have been a personal grievance between the three men and Mr. Berger and culminated in Mr. Berger seeking police aid. Marshal Appleby arrived on the scene and gave two of the would-be assailants a taste of discipline which they will not soon forget. No one was arrested, although one man was taken to the police station and then released. Owing to the prominence and publicity of the affair it has created considerable comment on the streets today.

Breathe Through the Nose.

The sense of smell has been considered so exclusively the sole function of the nose that if any child were asked "What is your nose for?" and it were to answer "To breathe with," the reply would create great astonishment. Yet this is undoubtedly the primary function of the nose, and all inspired air should pass through it.

PICNIC POSTPONED ON ACCOUNT WEATHER

Rusk Lyceum-Forum Festivities Put Off—Some Have Celebration Anyway.

Because of the threatening rain and the frigidty of the air the picnic of the Rusk Lyceum and Forum debating societies of the high school which was to have been held at Burr Springs today was postponed until a week from Saturday. However, a number of those who had decided to make a day of it refused to turn back and a score or more of young men and young ladies, under the chaperonage of a few teachers, made the trip to Burr Springs today. This afternoon will be spent on the baseball diamond and in other amusements.

Restlessness in Children.

"It is a good sign," says a recognized authority, "for children to be energetic and restless up to 7 years of age; but restlessness after that age is a bad sign." A sign of feverish nervous conditions inimical to growth of a healthy sort. Such restlessness should be curbed and a daily nap insisted upon. This will generally be found to promote the desired result.

Ribbons with Flowers.

Florists no longer content to decorate flowers with several dollars' worth of ribbon. That cannot be made to cost enough, whatever the quality of the ribbon may be. So it has become the fashion this spring to tie up the boxes in ribbons. From the most expensive shops there are sent out now boxes bound at one end with broad ribbons which add at least several dollars to the price of each box. Sometimes small bunches of the flowers inside are tied under the ribbon as an index to the contents of the box.

COMMEMORATE DAY IN A FITTING MANNER

Old Soldiers Decorate Graves of Dead Soldiers and Hold Exercises.

Memorial Day was properly commemorated by the William Sargent Post of the Grand Army of the Republic today. The post assembled at the hall at eight o'clock and at eight-thirty about forty old soldiers and sailors of the late rebellion, accompanied by a firing squad of eight, led by Capt. Cummins, and a drum corps, consisting of three snare-drums, two fifes and a bass drum, started for the cemetery to decorate the graves of the dead comrades. Besides the carloads there were three carvill loads of young ladies with flowers and flags to beautify the graves. On the car which left at nine o'clock were about fifteen soldiers of the late war with Spain. They had planned to have a larger number, but some were unable to get away from their work. This afternoon at 1:15 sharp a column will be formed on the streets and led by the drum corps will march up West Milwaukee street to the Grand Hotel, thence, back down to Main, down to Court, and then to the Courthouse, where the following exercises will be held at 2:15:

MAN IN THE COPPER BOX.

"Respiration Calorimeter" an Apparatus for the Study of the Human Body.

Some interesting deductions have been announced recently in regard to the study of the human body which has been going on for some time at the Middletown (Conn.) experiment station in co-operation with the federal government, says Country Life in America. Persons experimented on are shut up for a week or more in the "respiration calorimeter," which is an airtight copper box large enough to hold a man in comfort for several days. The chamber contains a folding bed, chair, table, etc., and ventilating pipes. A man is put into the room and then watched. Everything he consumes, his food, water, air, is carefully measured beforehand, and likewise everything he gives out. It would seem as if he could hardly think without the mental effort being measured and received in calories of heat. The air he has breathed is passed through purifying vessels which remove the carbon dioxide and whatever else his lungs have put into it. The deposit is then weighed. It would have been impossible to light a match or burn a candle in the respiration chamber during the experiment, yet the subject, who was purposely not told anything about it, read, slept, ate his meals, conversed with his friends over the telephone, and, in fact, seemed in the best spirits during the 24 hours the air was maintained in the above condition.

WISCONSIN HAS THE CHANCE OF WINNING

Harold Myers Is Looked Upon as a Possible Winner in Chicago.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Madison, Wis., May 30.—Wisconsin concedes first place in the western intercollegiate conference athletic meet to Michigan, but is confident of getting enough points to be second at Evanston, Saturday. Practical determination by the faculty to remove the ban of bad scholarship from the crack badger sprinter, Charles L. Parsons, has boosted Wisconsin stock, and even a victory in the meet would not surprise some badger enthusiasts. These count on Chicago and Illinois cutting into Michigan's points. Few critics, however, but grant some 22 or more points to Michigan. Wisconsin will score heavily, it is expected, in the sprints and hurdles. Parsons is banked to win the 100-yard and 220-yard dashes, and possibly Captain Waller and Ridout will also score in these events. Captain Waller is looked upon as a fairly sure winner in the 440-yard dash and 220-yard low hurdle race, with Ridout also a possible point-winner in the quarter-mile. Myers of Janesville is expected to take a point or more in the half-mile run. Hean and Cooper in the mile and two-mile runs may gather in some small points. McMillan and Springer will compete in the pole vault, but are hardly counted upon to score. Van Derzoo is fair in the broad jump, but will cause a joyful surprise if he gets a long enough jump to count in the final totals. Messmer is the best that Wisconsin has to offer in the weights, and he can hardly be expected to win against Parry of Chicago, Garrels of Michigan, Dunlap of Michigan and the other expert weight heavies who will represent teams rival to Wisconsin. Wisconsin has absolutely no expectations in the high jump and high hurdles. Should the badger athletes be in good spirits at the end of the meet, Waller, Parsons, Vreeland and Ridout may sneak in with the relay race. Dope slingers here say Wisconsin should surely get from 18 to 24 points, good enough for second place in the meet, while if Illinois and Chicago cut into Michigan seriously and mix things up generally, the badgers might squeeze out in first place.

A WOMAN WHO CAN WRITE HISTORY

Ida M. Tarbell an Example of What Determination, Courage and Industry May Accomplish

Precise and Judicial, Yet Engaging Author, Who Does Not Write For Effect, but Tells Facts—Eminently Fair, Free From Both Vanity and Falsity, She Is Not Easily Trapped—How She Became the Standard Oil's Champion Exposer

THE Garfield report and the president's special message on Standard Oil have got the octopus going again. The only trouble with all these exposures is that while they make the monster with the overproduction of less sleep they do not cause it to lose dollars, and that is the only sort of loss for which it really cares. It still has the same old strangle hold on the race, and it will take something more strenuous than messages to make it let go.

If the people really get stirred up enough to go after the beast—if an octopus can be called a beast—they will make an end of the creature. When the brave knights of old went out to slay a dragon they did not do it with a dictionary and an instant, but swathing their limbs with a few hundred pounds of boiler plate, they took a lance, a sword, a meat ax and some other weapons and sallied forth to rear up the earth in a clapping, roaring, slashing dragon fight.

The Need of Deeds.

The pen may be mightier than the sword, but the only way to get a thief to go after him with a gun and a pair of handcuffs. The great trust fortress will never be knocked down by publicity paper pellets. Might as well attack Gibraltar with a popgun. The campaign of exposure has its place, but only in getting people nerved up to the pitch where they will do the real work. If we stop with words we only succeed in harrowing up our own light on that dazzling figure. Her "Mme. Roland" and "Mme. de Staël" being these two great women of the French revolution nearer to us. Miss Tarbell makes her characters human and living. There is nothing light-fitting about her style. She does not write for effect. She tells facts, facts, facts, but does it directly and charmingly. Her powers of analysis, of generalization and of reaching just conclusions are admirable. She keeps her personality out of her work, looks at things with a broad and temperate view, has no private prejudices to air and is eminently fair, yet she conceals none of the story. In other words, she is a historian—or perhaps you prefer "an" historian, if you are a purist—who has the historical method. She is a judge on the bench reviewing the evidence that she herself brings. Though a woman, she is impersonal. For all that she is essentially womanly, loves feminine things, speaks in a low, well modulated voice, enjoys spending her evenings at the theater, reads novels and poetry, is fond of music and flowers and, greatest test of all, just dotes on cats.

Yet this very woman, once contemplated devoting her life to microscopic work. Later she spent three years in Paris studying historical methods, still later she devoted as long a time to delving into court records and legislative investigations of a great industrial corporation. More wonderful still, she enjoyed this work, mastered it as few men have done and presented its results to the world in a manner that ple and frank, she yet knows how to refrain from saying too much. She has the gift of silence and the faculty of precise statement. She is not one who would be easily trapped. She is wise in her simplicity, strong in her rectitude and fortified by her knowledge. Miss Tarbell was born in 1857 in Erie county, Pa. Her father soon moved to Titusville, in the middle of the oil field, where he was an independent producer. Her brother is still in the same business. Here the girl had an opportunity to observe the evolution of the industry of which she afterward became the foremost historian. She was educated in the public schools, graduated from the high school and afterward from a coeducational college at Meadville. She then became a teacher in a seminary for two years, after which her parents induced her to return home. It was at this time that she contemplated devoting her life to studies with the microscope. This purpose was changed by an offer of an editorship on the Chautauquan Magazine, then a small publication at Meadville. She remained with it for eight years, eventually becoming managing editor.

Her First Big Success.

In Paris she remained three years, attending lectures, ransacking the great library and learning how to dig out facts and to present them. To pay her way she contributed articles to the American newspapers and magazines. One of these articles fell under the eye of S. S. McClure and induced him to ask the author to join the staff of the magazine he was then starting. He called on Miss Tarbell in Paris and asked her to gather some anecdotes of Napoleon. She was the more ready to do this as she was just finishing her story of Mme. Roland, and all her studies of the French revolution seemed to lead her toward the great Corsican. Later Mr. McClure wired her to write a life of the French emperor, telling her that the first installment must be in the next month. The audacity of the thing appealed to the resolute woman, and she agreed to do it. That short life of Napoleon was her first big success.

At this time she returned to America. Afterward she took up the early life of Lincoln, which she supplemented by a complete biography of the great emancipator. In this work her new historical method began to tell. She communicated personally or by letter with almost every man and woman who had known Lincoln and thus gathered much new and interesting material. That work established Miss Tarbell's fame.

The manner of taking up the Standard Oil history has been told by herself. At an editorial council of the magazine the best method of handling the trust question was discussed. Miss Tarbell suggested the giving of some concrete example such as the Standard, concerning which there was so much material available. Her idea was finally adopted, and she herself was deputed to write the history. She was already somewhat familiar with the great trust from her girlhood in the oil regions and from the further fact that very early in her life she had written a novel woven about Rockefeller and his methods, which she concluded was too crude for publication.

A Laborious Task.

She went about her great task by investigating the testimony in cases tried against the trust. For the most part she depended on the sworn statements of the officials of the company themselves. This investigation was laborious and led her into many different states, but the work was done thoroughly. She determined at the inception that the work must be without bias and that both sides of the story must be told. She found the architect of the Standard and the key to all its policies in John D. Rockefeller, and taking Emerson's motto that "an institution is but the lengthened shadow of a man" she interpreted the trust through this man, who was its center and brain. The upshot of her whole investigation showed that the Standard Oil had been built up, as has so many of the other monopolies, through the railroad rebate; that back of this monopoly, great and oppressive as it is, stands a greater and more oppressive one, that of special privilege in transportation.

The threatened reorganization of McClure's will take out of the staff three of its best known members, Miss Tarbell, Lincoln Steffens and Ray Stannard Baker. It is practically assured that they will start a new magazine. J. A. EDGERTON.

feelings. Hard names never made a brigand cease from being a robber, but with such people the strong walls of a jail are a powerful argument for decency. Organized selfishness will not succumb to hot air. It is coming time to take tools adapted to the work in hand. There is no call for going daffy with theorizing and agonizing, when all we need are a little honesty, courage and common sense—yes, and deeds. We certainly need deeds.

Yet the investigations and preambles are necessary preludes. All praise to them, and while exalting the utterances of the chief magistrate and his commissioner of corporations let us not forget one who preceded both of them in the work of exposing Standard Oil and who wrought more mightily to that end than any other single agency. That this one is a woman entitles her to all the more honor. Her name is Ida M. Tarbell. After long months spent with high financiers, politicians, yellow journalists, sports, kings and other more or less disappointing male bipeds it is a genuine pleasure to write of such a character as Miss Tarbell. She is like a cool oasis in a desert of muscullarity.

Chief Woman Historian.

Miss Tarbell in addition to being the champion exposé of Standard Oil is the chief woman historian not only of the present day, but of all days. In fact, she is practically the only one. Women often have made history, but seldom have written it. Miss Tarbell not only writes it, but writes it well. She is accurate and judicial, yet always interesting. She is exhaustive in gathering her facts, knows how to choose the salient ones, how to arrange them effectively and how to tell them in a simple yet attractive manner. Her "Life of Lincoln" is a masterpiece. Many consider it the most readable biography of the martyr president. Her "Napoleon" threw a new

MARVELS OF STRENGTH

Teamster's Remarkable Exploit In Smashing Records.

SEWED ASTONISHING AGILITY

William J. Liebeck, Who Wants to Be Chicago Poleman, Jumped Across a Table and Then Leaped Over It Jeopardywise—Last Test, Which Is Mental, the Crucial One.

Hitting his horses outside police headquarters in the city hall at Chicago the other day, William J. Liebeck, a teamster, in half an hour convinced a medical examination board that he is a perfect man, combining the beauty of an Adonis with the strength of an Atlas, says a Chicago special dispatched to the New York Press. Liebeck is a candidate for the star and "billy" of a Chicago policeman, but it is not at all certain that he will get the post. The final test is mental, and Liebeck's 100 per cent for physical prowess may yet go for naught.

He performed prodigies of strength, and at times the examiners feared he would wreck the testing apparatus. He almost blew off the top of the lung tester, registering a capacity of 300 cubic inches against the 250 cubic inches of the average man. When Liebeck expanded his chest the physicians around gazed at him in amazement. The man's normal chest measure is forty, and he swelled up until the tape stretched to forty-six inches. He said he could expand another inch, but the medical board ruled, in dry humor, that he had amply demonstrated his qualification in this respect. His mark of six inches was said by the physicians to be one of the largest on record.

Liebeck is twenty-seven years old and 5 feet 11 1/2 inches in height. He is of German parentage. In all tests save one he has given 100 per cent. His back lift was 320 pounds compared with the average of 200. In the leg tests he pulled 545 pounds, an even 200 above the records of all police examinations. He went through the most severe tests with two ten pound dumbbells caught in one hand against the six pounds in one dumbbell generally used. In every trial Liebeck went to an extraordinary point above the average. His lowest mark was in the traction pull, when he was only twelve pounds above the average.

It was thought when Liebeck was undergoing the strength tests that he would fall below the average in agility, but he displayed a nimbleness that was astonishing. One of the requirements was to jump on a table. Liebeck jumped across it, and then he leaped clean over it lengthwise. He turned somersaults with the precision of a trained acrobat.

Liebeck does not affect physical culture. When asked where he got his strength he said he "just grew." His daily work is in trucking for a big wholesale dry goods store. After he had been pronounced a "perfect man" he went out to his truck again and drove off.

Result of a Linguistic Discussion of Brooklyn Handicap Winner.

The victory of J. W. Fuller's mare Tokalon in the Brooklyn handicap recently started a lot of speculation about her name, says the New York Times.

"Where could such a name come from?" was a common question. "An ordinary, garden, short cut linguist thought the name must have something to do with Tokay grapes. A real word student who was in the group suggested something better. "Beyond a doubt," he said, "it is a Greek name. The first part is the article 'to.' The second is 'kalon,' the neuter form of the word meaning 'beautiful.' The whole word literally means 'the beautiful thing,' but the real meaning is 'beauty.' From what I hear of the mare she deserves it."

No More Cowboy Police.

The rapid advance of Indian Territory towns from frontier centers of population to modern cities is shown by the changed aspect of the police in some of the leading municipalities, says the Kansas City Journal. The new administrations both in Tulsa and Muskogee have relegated the cartridge belt and cowboy hat formerly worn by the police to the plains where they belong, and have adopted the regulation blue uniform and club of city police. At Tulsa summer uniforms have been adopted for the force.

Chinatown Found Under Seattle.

An underground Chinese colony, similar to that which existed in San Francisco, has been discovered at Seattle, Wash., by city officials, says a Seattle dispatch. By burrowing under buildings, sidewalks and alleys the Chinese have excavated passageways to rooms for gambling and opium smoking. Many of the rooms are lighted by electricity. Some of the passageways extend for half a block or more and are many feet below subcellars and sidewalks.

Ominous News From Kentucky.

Thousands of the so called seventeen year locusts are coming up from the ground and literally overrunning the land about Glasgow, Ky. Their wings bear figures like unto the letters "W. W." says a Glasgow correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer. By the superstitious this is regarded as an omen of "want and war." It is further asserted that on the last appearance of the locusts, in 1889, their wings bore the letters "P. P." betokening "peace and prosperity."

SKIN DISEASES

ACNE, TETTER, ECZEMA, PSORIASIS, SALT RHEUM.

There is nothing more distressing than an itching, burning skin disease, and upon the return of warm weather those who are afflicted with skin troubles find the symptoms appearing and know that they will be tormented through the hot summer months. The blood is heated with humors and acid matter, and as they are forced to the surface the skin seems to be on fire. The treatment of skin diseases with external applications is all wrong, because they do not reach the trouble which is in the blood. The most such treatment can be expected to do is, allay the itching and burning and cover up the trouble for awhile, but as soon as it is left off the disease returns.

All food taken into the body contains, in some form, the elements necessary to sustain the different parts. One portion is used for the making of blood, another for muscle, one for bone, still another for fat, and so on. After these different properties are extracted from the food there still remains a portion that is useless, or waste matter, which is intended to be disposed of through the natural channels of bodily waste, the Liver, Kidneys and Bowels. At this season of the year, however, these organs become torpid, dull and sluggish, and fail to perform this duty, and these accumulations remain in the system and are absorbed by the blood to ferment and sour, producing burning acids and acrid humors. The blood cannot properly nourish the system while in this impure condition, and begins to throw off these acids through the pores and glands of the skin, producing Acne, Eczema, Tetter, Psoriasis, Salt Rheum and skin diseases of every description.

THE ITCHING WAS ALMOST UNBEARABLE.

Dear Sirs—My body broke out with a rash or eruption which in spite of all efforts to cure continued to get worse. The itching, especially at night, was simply terrible; it would almost disappear at times, only to return worse than ever. I had tried many highly recommended preparations without benefit, and hearing of S. S. S. determined to give it a fair trial, and was inexpressibly delighted when a few bottles cured me entirely, removing every blemish and pimple from my body. I shall not fail to recommend S. S. S. whenever an opportunity occurs to do so. Escondido, Cal. L. MARNO.

ECZEMA appears usually with a slight redness of the skin, followed by pustules from which there flows a sticky fluid that dries and forms a crust, and the itching is intense. It is generally on the back, breast, arms, legs and face, though other parts of the body may be afflicted. In TETTER the skin dries, cracks and bleeds, and is often very painful. The acid in the blood dries up the natural oils of the skin, causing a dry, feverish, hardened condition and giving it a leathery appearance. ACNE makes its appearance on the face in the form of pimples and black-heads, and is particularly disagreeable because of its unsightly appearance, while PSORIASIS, a scaly disease, comes in patches on different parts of the body. One of the worst forms of skin disease is SALT RHEUM. It discharges a watery fluid, forming sores and producing intense itching. The head and face are the parts usually affected, and sometimes the hair falls out and a mass of sores forms on the scalp.

These and all skin diseases are due to the same cause—burning acids and humors in the blood, and until this vital fluid is cleansed and made pure they will continue. The best treatment for all skin diseases is S. S. S., a remedy that is purely vegetable, being made entirely from roots, herbs and barks, and acts directly on the blood with a cleansing, healing effect. It neutralizes the acids and purifies the blood so that the skin, instead of being blistered and burned by the fiery fluids, is nourished by a supply of cooling, healthy blood. It goes down into the circulation and forces out every particle of waste or foreign matter, builds up the blood and cures all skin diseases promptly and permanently. S. S. S. does not leave the least particle of the poison for future outbreaks, but entirely rids the blood of the cause for all skin diseases.

S. S. S. tones up the system and regulates the Liver, Kidneys and Bowels so that they will carry off the natural waste and refuse matter through the proper channels, instead of leaving it to be absorbed by the blood. Nothing equals S. S. S. in the treatment of these troubles and for building up the general health. Write for our treatise on skin diseases and any medical advice you wish. We make no charge for either.

The Brethren

By RIDER HAGGARD,

"Greeting, my uncle," she said to the sultan, "and to you, my cousins, greeting also. What is your pleasure with me?"

Saladin motioned to her to be seated and bade Godwin set out the case, which he did very clearly, ending:

"Is it your wish, Rosamund, that we stay in this cave as prisoners or go forth to fight with the Franks in the great war that is to be?"

Rosamund looked at them awhile, then answered:

"To whom were you sworn the first? Was it to the service of our Lord or to the service of a woman? I have said."

"Such words as we expected from you, being what you are," exclaimed Godwin, while he nodded his head in assent and added:

"Sultan, we ask your safe conduct to Jerusalem and leave this lady in your charge, relying on your pledged word to do no violence to her faith and to protect her person."

"My safe conduct you have," replied Saladin, "and my friendship also. Nor, indeed, should I have thought well of you had you decided otherwise. Now, henceforth we are enemies in the eyes of all men, and I shall strive to slay you as you will strive to slay me, but as regards this lady, have no fear. What I have promised shall be fulfilled. Did her father, whom you will see no more."

"Who taught your lips to say such words, O sultan?" asked Godwin. "Is it given to you to read the future and the decrees of God?"

"I should have said," answered Saladin, "Whom you will see no more I am able to keep you apart. Can you complain who, both of you, have refused to take her as a wife?"

Here Rosamund looked up wondering, and Wulf broke in:

"Tell her the price. Tell her that she was asked to wed either of us who would bow the knee to Mohammed, and to be the head of his harem, and I think that she will not blame us."

"Never would I have spoken again to him who answered otherwise," exclaimed Rosamund, and Saladin frowned at the words. "Oh, my uncle," she went on, "you have been kind to me and raised me high, but I do not seek this greatness, nor are your ways my ways, who am of a faith that you call accursed. Let me go, I beseech you, in care of these my kinsmen."

"And your lovers," said Saladin bitterly. "Alas, it cannot be. I love you well, but did I know even that your life must pay the price of your sojourn here, here you still should stay, since, as my dream told me, on your hand the lives of thousands, and I believe that dream. Oh, everything that my empire can give is at your feet, but here you stay until the dream be accomplished."

"Until the dream be accomplished?" said Rosamund, catching at the words. "Then, when it is accomplished, shall I be free?"

"Aye," answered the sultan, "free to come or to go, unless you attempt escape, for then you know your certain doom."

"It is a decree," take note, my cousins, it is a decree, and you, Prince Hassan, remember it also. Oh, I pray, with all my soul I pray, that it was no lying spirit who brought you that dream, my uncle, though how I shall bring peace, who hitherto have brought nothing except war and bloodshed, I know not. Now go, my cousins; but if you will, leave me Masouda, who has no other friends. Go, and take my love and blessing with you."

So spoke Rosamund and threw her veil before her face that she might hide her tears.

Where Godwin and Wulf stepped to when she stood by the throne of Saladin, bent the knee before her, and, taking her hand, kissed it in farewell, nor did the sultan say them nay, but when she was gone and the brethren were gone he turned to the Emir Hassan and to the great imam, who had sat silent all this while, and said:

"Now tell me, you who are old and wise, which of those men does the lady love? Speak, Hassan, you who know her well."

But Hassan shook his head. "One or the other. Both or neither, I know not," he answered. "Her counsel is too close for me."

Then Saladin turned to the imam—a cunning, silent man.

"When both the infidels are about to die before her face, as I still hope to see them do, we may learn the answer; but, unless she wills it, never before," he replied, and the sultan noted his saying.

Next morning, having been warned that they would pass there by Masouda, Rosamund, watching through the lattice of one of her palace windows, saw the brethren go by. They were fully armed and mounted on their splendid chargers Flane and Smoked, looked glorious as usual, followed by their escort of swarthy, turbaned mamlukes, they rode proudly side by side, the sunlight glinting on their mail. Opposite to her house they halted awhile and, knowing that Rosamund watched, although they could not see her, drew their swords and lifted them in salute. Then, sheathing them again, they rode forward in silence and soon were lost to sight.

Little did Rosamund guess how different they would appear when they three met again. Indeed, she scarcely dared to hope that they would ever meet, for she knew well that even if the war went in favor of the Christians she would be hurried away to some place where they would never find her. She knew well also that from Damascus her rescue was impossible. The struggle between cross and crescent would be fierce and to the death, and she was sure that there was the closest fighting there in the midst of it would be found Godwin and Wulf.

Oh, she was great! Gold was hers, with gems more than she could count, and few were the weeks that did not bring her added wealth or gifts. She had palaces to dwell in—alone; gardens to wander in—alone; eunuchs and slaves to rule over—alone. But never a friend had she save the woman of the assassins, to whom she clung because she, Masouda, had saved her from Sinai, and who clung to her, why Rosamund could not be sure, for there was a veil between their spirits.

"They were gone; they were gone!" Rosamund bowed her head and wept; then, hearing a sound behind her, turned to see that Masouda was weeping also.

"Why do you weep?" she asked.

"The maid should copy her mistress," answered Masouda, with a hard laugh; "but, lady, why do you weep? At least you are beloved, and come what may, nothing can take that from you."

A thought rose in Rosamund's mind—a new and terrible thought. The eyes of the two women met, and those of Rosamund asked "Which?" anxiously.

"Which?" she asked.

sultan walked alone. He was lost in thought, and Godwin read his thought. It was: "Behind me the Jordan and the sea of Galilee, into which, if my flanks were turned, I should be driven. I and all my host. In front the territories of the Franks, where I have no friend, and by Nazareth their great army. Allah alone can help me. If they sit still and force me to advance across the desert and attack them before my army melts away, then I am lost. If they advance upon me round the mountain Tabor and by the watered land, I may be lost. But if—oh, if Allah should make them mad, and they should strike straight across the desert, then—then they are lost, and the reign of the cross in Syria is forever at an end."

Look! Near to the partition of Saladin stood another tent, closely guarded, and in it on a cushioned bed lay two women. One was Rosamund, and the other was Masouda.

The last veil was withdrawn, and now Godwin saw a sight at which his soul shivered. A fire-blackened plain and above it a frowning mountain, and that mountain thick, thick with dead, thousands and thousands and thousands of dead, among which the hyacinths wandered and the night birds screamed. He could see their faces; many of them he knew again as those of living men whose he had met in Jerusalem and elsewhere or had noted with the army.

Godwin awoke from his dream trembling, pounced his horse and rode back to Wulf.

"Tell me," asked Godwin, "how long is it since I left you?"

"Some few minutes—ten perhaps," answered his brother.

"A short while to have seen so much," replied Godwin. Then he told him all and at the end asked him, "What think you?"

Wulf considered awhile and answered:

"Well, brother, you have touched no wine today, so you are not drunk, and you have done nothing foolish, so you are not mad. Therefore it would seem that the saints have been talking to you. Our watch is ended, for I hear the horses of the knights who come to relieve us. Listen. This is my counsel: In the camp yonder is our friend with whom we traveled from Jerusalem, Egbert, the bishop of Nazareth, who marches with the host. Let us go to him and lay this matter before him, for he is a holy man and learned."

Godwin nodded in assent, and presently, when the other knights were come, and they had made their report to them, they rode off together to the tent of Egbert.

Egbert was an Englishman who had spent more than thirty years of his life in the east, whereof the sun had tanned his wrinkled face to the hue of bronze that seemed the darker in contrast with his blue eyes and snow white hair and beard. Entering the tent, they found him at his prayers. Presently he rose and asked them what they needed.

"Your counsel, holy father," answered Wulf.

So, having seen that the tent flap was closed and that none lingered near, Godwin told him his dream.

The old man listened patiently, nor did he seem surprised at this strange story, since in those days men saw, or thought they saw, many such visions.

When he had finished Godwin asked of him as he had asked of Wulf: "What think you, holy father? Is this a dream or is it a message?"

Saladin with her friend Godwin in a single Arabian tent.

as once in the moonlight she had asked it with her voice from the gate above the narrow way. Between them stood a table laden with ivory and pearl, whereon the dust from the street had gathered through the open lattice. Masouda leaned over and with her forefinger wrote a single Arabic letter in the dust upon the table, then passed her hand across it.

Rosamund's breast heaved twice or thrice and was still. Then she asked:

"Why did not you, who are free, go with him?"

"Because he prayed me to bide here and watch over the lady whom he loved. So to death I watch."

CHAPTER XXVII.

MANY a day had gone by since the brethren bade farewell to Rosamund at Damascus.

Now, one burning July night, they sat upon their horses, the moonlight gleaming on their mail. Still as statues they sat, looking out from a rocky mountain top across that gray and arid plain which stretches from near Nazareth to the lip of the hills at whose foot lies Tiberias, on the sea of Galilee. Beneath them, camped around the fountain of Seffurich, were spread the hosts of the Franks to which they did sentinel; 1,300 knights, 20,000 foot and hordes of Torcopolos—that is, natives of the country, armed after the fashion of the Saracens.

Tomorrow they were to advance, so rumor said, across yonder desert plain and give battle to Saladin, who lay with all his power by Hattin, above Tiberias. Godwin and his brother thought that it was a madness, for they had seen the might of the Saracens and ridden across that thirsty plain beneath the summer sun. Godwin's heart was troubled, and fear took hold of him, not for himself, but for the countless army that lay asleep yonder, and for the cause of Christianity.

"I go to watch yonder. Bide you here," he said to Wulf, and, turning the head of Flame, rode some sixty yards over a shoulder of the rock to the further edge of the mountain which looked toward the north. Dismounting, and bidding the horse stand, which it would do like a dog, he walked forward a few steps to where there was a rock, and, kneeling down, began to pray.

It seemed to Godwin that a sleep fell on him—at least his mind grew clouded and confused. Then it cleared again, slowly, as stirred water clears, till it was bright and still. Like curtains the veils were lifted from his eyes, and as they swung aside he saw further and yet further.

He saw the king of the Franks in his count beneath, and about him his council of his captains, among them the fierce-eyed master of the Templars and Count Raymond of Tripoli, the lord of Tiberias. They were reasoning together or till presently, in a rage, the master of the Templars drew his sword and dashed it down upon the table.

Another veil was lifted, and, lo, he saw the camp of Saladin, the mighty, endless camp, with its 10,000 tents. He saw the war went in favor of the Christians

STANFORD MAN'S STORY

How University Students Were Dug Out of Ruins.

LAST ONE REACHED WAS DEAD.

Others Were Unconscious and Badly Maimed—Freshman Says He and His Fellows Had to Walk Over Broken Glass in Bare Feet—Mrs. Stanford's Residence Split in Two.

Clarence W. Vaughn, a freshman at Stanford university, has written a letter to his relatives in New York city describing the earthquake that hit the university and the work he and his fellow students did in saving a number of others who were buried in the ruins of one of the dormitories, says the New York Sun. The letter was mailed the day after the earthquake.

"Young Vaughn says that the damage to the university is estimated by the authorities at $2,500,000. This is how he describes the scenes when the earthquake tumbled the students out of bed in Encina hall, where he had his room: "Yesterday morning (April 18) about 5:13 I was awakened by the most terrible sensation and noise imaginable. The bed was jumping up and down—in fact, all the furniture. You could not walk on the floor. It was vibrating so. I finally got over to the door, but could not open it. All the time everything was creaking and swaying in the worst manner imaginable.

"Well, I jumped out on to the window sill and spanned the large stone partition between my window and that of the fellow's next door (I am up three stories). I rushed out of this fellow's room in my pajamas and bare feet. I am in the central wing and just above the clubroom. The chimney had fallen through the skylight, and the stones and glass were strewn on the landing in front of the annex.

"We had to walk over broken glass in our bare feet. If I had been able to open the door when I first tried I would have been on the landing when those stones fell. The night watchman certainly must carry around with him a horseshoe. He was just stepping out of our wing on to the landing when a big stone fell down, sliding along his arm. The only thing he got out of it was a scratch on his hand. If he had been over to the right half a foot he would have been killed.

"Well, when the shocks were over we went back and dressed. We did not have to look very far to see where the worst calamity had taken place. There was a large hole in the floor of the foyer, and from the sides of it you could have a fine view of the sky. The massive chimney had broken the roof and carried it down with it. This immense weight carried the next floor and all the other floors with it down to the basement. About five fellows were caught in this big heap. The doors were torn out so neatly that a human hand could hardly have done better. All the furniture, beds, wardrobes, chairs, etc., went down in the heap. The wreckage was piled from the basement floor clear up above the main floor.

"You should have seen us fellows work then. We got in the heap and began clearing it so as to get at the fellows underneath. Some of the pipes had broken and the water was pouring down into the pile. After a great deal of effort the water was stopped. The huge stones of the chimney and of the wall were in the heap. Fellows' clothes were in the heap, and also their books. One by one the fellows were hauled out. Each one was unconscious and badly maimed. After two hours of digging into the heap they finally came upon the body of the last fellow in the wreck. He was dead. Poor fellow, I feel so sorry for his parents, as he was their only son. His home is in Bradford, Pa.

"They had to press the stages into service as ambulances. All rooms in Encina were more or less wrecked. Our new $800,000 library (uncompleted) swayed to and fro, and then suddenly the sides collapsed and the roof fell in. The new grand gymnasium—the best in the world—had its roof collapse. The steeple of our magnificent church fell over, breaking through the church roof. The first mosaic of Christ on the mount fell down. The frieze on the top of the memorial arch broke and one foot of the arch is out of place. Part of the roof of the new museum collapsed. The chemistry building had considerable damage done to it as well as to the bottles. The beautiful entrance tumbled down into an unrecognizable pile of stone, with the roof on top. The tall chimney was broken about twenty feet from the base. In its fall it killed the engineer.

"One of the statues on the outside of the zoological building took a tumble of thirty feet. It dived through the cement sidewalk below and stopped at the shoulders. Mrs. Stanford's residence was split in two. The funny part about it is that the split divided Mrs. Stanford's room exactly in half. In truth, it seemed as if the world had come to an end.

"All that night I slept out on the lawn in front of Encina. We kept a guard around all the university buildings. Roughly speaking, our loss is $2,500,000. Everybody thinks this a terribly low estimate. President Jordan just returned in time to witness the catastrophe. Yesterday morning he said that he hoped to have classes started today, but he probably said that to try to get the fellows to stay. The committee which inspected the buildings decided to discontinue instruction for the rest of the semester. Encina has been declared dangerous, and every one is moving possessions. I intend to strike for a job if there is any."

FINANCING A FIRE LOSS

How Insurance Companies Get Money For a Big One.

METHOD OF ADJUSTING CLAIMS

Their Payment at Earliest Possible Moment Aimed At—Relation Between Quick Assets and Quick Settlements—When Securities Have to Be Liquidated.

San Francisco's great fire has directed attention to the manner in which an insurance company goes about to settle a huge loss bill, says the New York Post. Although the companies are abundantly able to pay and many of them possess very heavy bank balances, the adjustment of claims calling for the payment of $150,000,000 or more, represents a financial operation of sufficient magnitude to involve rather careful financing. How are these huge claims to be met, where will the companies get their money from and how long will it take to effect a settlement? These questions have direct bearing upon the money market and to a limited extent the future cost of security prices for such issues as are usually held by large fire underwriting corporations.

As soon as a great insurance company learns that it will have to foot the bill for a huge conflagration its officials hold a hurried conference and get at the volume of their liquid assets and the extent of their combined bank balances. In the case of a large foreign underwriting corporation its home office in London, Liverpool, Manchester, Berlin or Paris is immediately communicated with and a rough estimate made of the probable aggregate demand. With most of these companies it is a matter of pride to pay the claims at the earliest possible moment. At the time of the great Chicago fire in 1871, when property valued at $100,000,000 was destroyed, and a year later, when the insurance companies had to pay an $80,000,000 loss bill for the Boston fire, many of the claims were settled within a few days after the conflagration took place.

In the same way the companies did their best two years ago to pay the losses of the Baltimore fire without unreasonable delay. In this way they gained prestige. Within one week after the Boston fire one of the largest New York companies, having dispatched a vice president to the scene to pay claims in double quick time, wrote a sufficient volume of new insurance to recoup itself for all the losses sustained. These quick settlements involve equally quick financing, and one of the features of the present movement on the part of the underwriters to effect speedy settlement of the San Francisco losses has been the negotiation with the home offices of the foreign companies for curold transfers of money with which to meet the claims.

When a loss occurs an insurance company first has recourse to its bank balances, and when these are insufficient to meet immediate claims the company borrows what it needs. Most of the large companies have accounts in four or five banks, so that they can easily secure accommodations in case it is required. When the bank balances are insufficient and losses are heavily in excess of $200,000 the company has to either borrow funds or sell some of the stocks or bonds that it has in its list of assets. In the case of the Baltimore fire most of the companies managed to pay out what was needed without resorting to any violent liquidations at all. Whatever securities were sold to pay the claims there involved were for the most part sacrificed by companies that were too weak to bear the loss and were forced to reinsure their risks with some stronger rival. This was done in the case of nine or ten companies that had to an extent ignored the dangers of what our insurance men call the "conflagration hazard" and accepted too many risks in the affected area.

In the case of very large companies, however, which do a heavy business throughout the United States and Europe as well the perils of the "conflagration hazard" are minimized by the fact that the risks are so widely distributed as to render it almost impossible for any one disaster to entail a sufficient loss to cripple the company. Whatever losses are sustained by foreign companies operating in San Francisco will have probably to be financed from the other side, since the companies doing the largest business have only an insignificant amount of money invested in American stocks or bonds. For that reason these companies are not likely to sell any large portion of the stocks held in the United States.

The payment of a great fire loss is a very interesting operation. Hundreds of men are employed in it and special adjusters for special risks have to visit the scene. It will be weeks before the San Francisco claims are wholly liquidated, but within a month a large portion of the insurance loss will be settled for. While the insurance companies will not pay for earthquake damage, it will be difficult in many claims to tell where the earthquake damage left off and the fire damage began. For that reason the great fire companies that were arranging with their banks for large advances a few days ago based their negotiations on the probability of having to stand a very large proportion of whatever property loss was actually involved.

FRISCO HORROR INCIDENTS.

Human Interest Scenes and Acts Many in Ruined City.

Here are some stories about the many tragic and strange incidents of the great San Francisco disaster which were printed in the Chicago Record-Herald:

An aged woman, trembling with fright, stood on a corner at the edge of the devastated territory the other day. A man appeared at her side, and attempted to wrest a ring from her finger, and as they struggled the assailant fell dead at her feet. A soldier had shot him down. The people of San Francisco are applauding this merciless meting out of justice to thieves, which has led to scores of shootings and many deaths.

J. B. Fiske of Chicago was sleeping in a room on the third floor of the Terminus hotel when the earthquake came. The second flight of stairs gave way when he was going down, and he fell to the hotel lobby. "I have not a scar to show for the fall of two stories, but a few bruises make my body sore and tender," he said. "I guess I have my lucky stars to thank that I came through the Johnstown flood and Galveston disaster and the San Francisco earthquake without serious injury."

Scores of weddings have resulted from the disaster. Women whose homes have been burned and who are left destitute have appealed to the men to whom they were engaged for immediate marriage, and the response has been prompt. "I don't live anywhere. I used to live in San Francisco," is the frequent response to questions at the marriage license clerk's window, the applicants explaining that their homes have been destroyed. Since the first day of the catastrophe County Clerk Cook has noticed an increase in the number of licenses, and the increase is growing steadily. The other day seven licenses were issued in an hour. No other business is conducted in the county clerk's office except the issuing of marriage licenses.

Clad in a fashionable summer suit, with straw hat and kid gloves, a young man was stopped by soldiers and was put to work in the streets as a laborer. He was ordered to help clear away the bricks and other debris from the street car tracks. He hesitated, but a prod from behind with a sharp bayonet convinced him that the soldiers were in earnest. For the next five hours the immaculately clad young man, who had been on the way to Berkeley, labored among city workmen, volunteers and many who like himself had been drafted into service. As a result of this system the streets are being cleared rapidly.

cisco, having no stockings. He had lost all his valuables and most of his clothing in the ruins of the hotel. The most disconsolate members of the whole organization were the members of the orchestra, who had lost instruments valued at $25,000. Taurino Davis, the baritone, left in felt slippers three sizes too large and a hat several sizes too small. He had blisters on his feet and was much bruised. In the midst of the falling of the city he escaped from the Oak hotel. He is about the only member of the opera company who received bodily hurts.

CRACKERS AS WEDDING CAKE

Merchant Declined to Let Bride Disaster Haul Ceremony.

A hasty wedding that sent some of the gloom of the San Francisco disaster from the hearts of refugees took place in Berkeley, Cal., the other evening. Robert F. Benham, a young merchant and prominent citizen of Portland, was on his way to San Francisco to wed Miss Mary Louise Hale, a society girl of that city, when the earthquake occurred. When his train arrived in San Francisco the city was in flaming ruins.

After a search of two days he located his sweetheart and some of her friends. They were shelterless and in dire want, having escaped from the flames with nothing but their clothing. Together the party came to Berkeley, where they found friends and were hastily married. Soda crackers were used for wedding cake.

The Conquerors.

The west was a wilderness once, and the men Who made it a garden will make it again. Or their sons, who are sprung of the true bulldog line.

To link each brave year with the brave forty-nine.

On the anvil of Earth, with Fate for a sledge. The will of the west got its temper and edge. No disaster can turn it, no grief give it stay. When the will of the west has decided its way.

Though palaces crumble in ashes and dust. The west has its will and its vigor to stand. And, quietly facing the future, is filled. Less with grief over ruin than ardor to build.

These orchard and vineyard again shall bestow. Their fruit of the sun on the city below. And again to the gate where the long bay lies curled Shall argosies fare with the wealth of a world.

San Francisco again on the hilltops shall stand. Desired of the sea and beloved of the land. More splendid, more certain, more true for the test. Firm founded forever in the heart of the west.

FLOORS FULL OF REFUGEES.

Sample of the First Night in San Francisco's Unburned Part.

M. H. Morse, the San Francisco representative of the American Trading company, has written a letter to the main office of the company, New York, telling of the condition he found San Francisco in when he arrived there the day of the earthquake, says the New York Sun. Mr. Morse had passed the night in Berkeley. He reached San Francisco a few hours after the shock and went immediately to the company's offices, which were still standing, but the building had settled so that the heavy Oregon pine doors could not be forced open. After many attempts to get into the office and secure papers that were in the safe, Mr. Morse says he was compelled to abandon this task when the fire reached the building, which it subsequently consumed.

Mr. Morse's letter was written from Berkeley the day following the earthquake. In speaking of the condition when he left the burning city, he writes:

"If the fire extends to Twenty-third street, our little house is likely to be filled up. The invoice clerk in our office resides on Bern Heights, and last night his home of four rooms was filled with refugees. The floor of every room was covered with sleeping women and children, and he stood guard all night keeping off drunken men who were determined to get in. This is only one case of thousands."

INSTANCES OF PLUCK.

Unconquerable Spirit Shown by San Francisco's People.

Incidents met at every turn show the unconquerable spirit of the people of San Francisco, says a special dispatch to the Cincinnati Enquirer. Two race track men met in the drive.

"Hello, Bill, where are you living now?" asked one.

"You see that tree over there—that big one?" said Bill. "Well, you climb that and my room is on the third branch to the left."

And they went away laughing. One man wanted to know whether the fire had reached his home. He was informed that there was not a house standing in that section of the city. He shrugged his shoulders and whistled.

"There are lots of others in the same boat," he said as he turned away.

And those men who have lost everything are planning to begin all over again.

"Going to build?" asked one man who lost family and home inside of two hours. "Of course I am. They tell me that the money in the banks is all right, and I have some insurance. Fifteen years ago I began with these," showing his hands, "and I guess I'm game to do it over again. Build again? Well, I wonder!"

It is considered probable that the British parliament will increase the tax on motor cars this year. It will be levied on the purchase price.
